Hourglass of Destruction

Hope and jubilation are transient riding compassions as the Knights and squires depart Castle Liberum for a tournament of nations. Those spurious emotions quickly evaporate, as a journey meant to unite the fracturing realms of Verngaard promptly turns into a battle for survival. Dark creatures spread roots of death and deceit, infecting ancient alliances, intent on turning the soil red with civil war. Can the Knights fight through the gathering enemy forces and turn back the coming storm before the sands of time run out?

"Great story! Love the tournament of flags (except for the dragon battle :( ---mild spoiler: one of my fav characters does not do well at the tournament). Writing is great."

"A MUST READ for fantasy lovers!"

"This is the second book in a fantasy series; hopefully there will be a third. This story is well told, the characters are interesting, and the plot hooks you from the beginning to the end. I loved it!"

"After reading Book One in the Far Forest Scrolls fantasy series, I wondered if the follow-up books would hold the same appeal. One thing's for sure – this book, Book Two, definitely does. It offers the same excitement and philosophical insight."

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Alpha Four, or A4, is an enigmatic figure from the turn of the first millennium of the Common Era (C.E.). Although the formality of his education is uncertain, we know he studied military history, martial skills, languages, history, philosophy, mathematics, religion, and wrote extensively. Evidence suggests he was a ranking courtier and military advisor in the turbulent environment that was England one thousand years ago. He likely served in Æthelred II's court (and possibly Sweyn I, the Danish sovereign who briefly sat on the English throne in 1013 C.E.).
